To whom it may concern.

After reviewing these proposed changes, it strikes me that CO elections are moving more and more towards a system that requires the citizens to put complete and blind trust in the way the SoS is operating. This is obviously not a good thing, we're moving away from any sort of checks and balances and any semblance of transparency. This move should be setting off alarm bells and throwing up red flag to anyone paying attention.

In my field of Internet security, we are striving for a condition where there is no need to trust anyone because the system is designed not to require it. It's called Zero Trust. Zero Trust creates complete transparency and with transparent verification at every step.

We no longer have any of this in Colorado elections. We are told to shut up and not buy the "Big Lie". Don't look here because that doesn't concern you. We had the most secure elections in history and we're the only ones qualified to determine that. We have ALL the power and you don't

This has got to stop, we're way off track here in Colorado.

Thanks for reading.
